Abstract

Treating Juncture in the Same Manner of Pause and Vise Versa in Arabic Syntax

Khawla Al-Qaralleh

Mu'tah University, 2006

This study aims at investigating the reasons behind treating juncture in the same manner of pause and vise versa in Arabic syntax, a process which has been adopted by syntactitions in numerous irregular syntactic issues related to case markers, morphological constructions or letters carrying the case marker. The study explains which cases go in harmony with the rules of treating juncture in the same manner of pause and which ones go against it. With reference to several issues including the first person pronoun "I" and other examples, particularly the poetic ones, the researcher, based on the syntactitions' and recitors' opinions, finds out that such a process used in Arabic was totally incorrect.

The study consists of three chapters and the conclusion. The first chapter sheds light on the process of pause, its definition, depending on the opinion of syntactitions and recitors, and its features. The study tackles all aspects relevant to the themes of the study including pause, apposition, gemination, epenthesis and deletion.

The second chapter investigates the reasons behind treating juncture in the same manner of pause from the perspective of both syntactitions and recitors. This covers aspects of the audible break in delivery (pause) and the audible continuation in the case of juncture.

Chapter Three, on the other hand, investigates the treatment of pause in the same manner of juncture; this covers three aspects, viz., the treatment of the feminist ta as a pure ta, the deletion of some appendixes, particularly the alf and the deletion of the ya in the u/a/in nouns ending in ya in prepause as in prejuncture positions.

Finally, the conclusion presents the findings of this study. Perhaps, the reader will notice the flexibility of Arabic and the possibility to deviate from the well-stated rules without linguistic or syntactic reasons.
